RECITAL OF WORKS BY AMERICAN AND RESIDENT COMPOSERS.—While the Boston public as a rule are not apt to become excited about novelties, it would yet have seemed strange if the unique excellence of Mr. Lavallee's concert in Union Hall on Tuesday evening had not been generally appreciated. We have to record indeed the first substantial recognition that has yet been afforded that among American and resident musicians the predominance of composers and men of creative talent is encouragingly large. It has remained for a foreigner not simply to discover the importance of the American musical profession in the respect referred to, but to demonstrate this importance in a manner at once creditable to his artistic ability, to his tact, and to his exceptional interest in a grossly neglected cause. Mr. Lavallee gave the first of his series of concerts at a disadvantage which few could have undergone with so much pluck, and with a result so successful; for though physically disabled and in constant suffering from pain, his piano playing was delightful and artistic to a degree that he has not yet manifested here; and no doubt owing to a superhuman effort on his part, with which the audience was in sympathetic admiration. There were no moments of dullness in his concert, and his programme represented the works of fifteen American and resident composers, namely: Wilson G. Smith of Cleveland; Lavallee, Foote, Maas, Sherwood and Jonas of Boston; and Buck and Mason of New York;—a generous list of other American composers to be represented at the next recital. It is but just to acknowledge as the most praiseworthy, as well as the most elaborate composition of the recital a trio for pianoforte, 'cello and violin, by Arthur Foote. The composer, as is not generally known, was for years a student in composition under Professor J. K. Paine of Harvard College, and we regret that the crowning element of the recital could not have taken the form of an even more extensive acknowledgment of the only American composer (Prof. Paine) whose compositions are generally respected in Germany. The trio referred to consists of four movements, an allegro con brio; allegro vivace; adagio and allegro comodo. It is evident that Mr. Foote has not constructed his work upon old models; nor has he permitted himself to be hampered by rules of formal construction and expression, in the use of which the older composers could well appear natural; for they were no mere imitators of law and order, but were in every essential respect creators, and therefore more or less superior to law. Mr. Foote's trio, like some of the best modern works of its class, is to be commended upon broader principles than such as refer to rigorous style of writing. Each movement is complete in itself, each is elegant; yet not the slightest room for doubt is afforded of the composer's ability to intertwine an abundant network of thematic material, though he has substituted instead a higher and more advanced system of development. The germ of every idea he presents most naturally unfolds itself, and the result achieved is in a vast amount of rich and original material which would amply repay an analysis of its every part, but which we have only had space to refer to it in general and as we trust in appreciative terms. At the conclusion of its performance by Messrs. Foote, DeSeve and Schmidt, the composer was several times recalled. Mr. Lavallee's compositions consisted of a Bolero, sung by Miss Maud Nichols, an Etude, Le Pallon, and an original transcription from Faust. To the Bolero, not even the most fastidious Spanish musicant could object, and it is not only admirable in suggesting the piquant and elastic step of the most popular of Spanish dances, but unusual skill has been shown in its vocal adaptation. Miss Maud Nichols rendered it with charming effect, the intricate malismas in which the piece abounds being delivered with rare clearness and nicety. Both the piano compositions are superbly constructed, and were rendered with an enthusiasm which necessitated Mr. Lavallee's response to several recalls. In regard to the remaining compositions performed, the exegencies of time and space impel a brief recognition of several interesting though unpretentious pieces by Sherwood, an admirable set of characteristic compositions by Wilson S. Smith, and a brilliant polacca by Jonas. There were no vacant seats in the hall until the close of the concert, and the interest bestowed was very hearty and unanimous in reflecting credit upon a most praiseworthy enterprise. MR. CALIXA LAVALLEE'S AMERICAN CONCERT. Comm Feb 15/85

Native composers are under a debt of gratitude to Mr. Calixa Lavallee for a step made in the right direction, an effort to bring before the public the best works of native musicians. That the idea was a success was abundantly proven by the audience which crowded Union Hall in every part, a vast number standing through the long programme. A concert like this, the first of its kind in this city, is not for criticism, nor was there anything in the performance to criticise adversely. The composers represented were Messrs. Wilson G. Smith (a rising young composer of Cleveland), Arthur Foote, Louis Maas, William H. Sherwood, Ernst Jonas, William Mason, Dudley Buck and Mr. Lavallee himself. Many of the works were in the smaller forms of composition. Mr. Arthur Foote's trio, performed by Messrs. De Seve, Jonas and the composer, was the most ambitious number of the concert, and impressed us as a most musicianly production. Besides the gentlemen mentioned above, Mr. Lavallee had the assistance of Miss Maud Nichols, soprano. A second concert also, entirely made up of the works of native composers, will be given in a couple of weeks, and what, with this and the "American" concert, with which the Apollo Club intend to close their season, the American muse seems at last to have a chance.
